The foundation of our prosperity is not very solid. It is therefore of aupreme importance that wise conomy should be exercised by the Government in all branches of expanditure, and the largest of these branches is the administrative staff. We are as much against cheese-paring as Mr Keswick, and freely admit that the most of the officers deserve the advance recently given. But there are too many offices. The administration is on too large a scale. Mr Whitehead, we repest, made out a very good case for retrenchment. A lieutebant governor is quite sufficient for a small town like Hongkong. During the last pine years the government has not been half the time in the hands of first-class governors, and he would be a bold man who would meert that the administrators have not done the work true we cannot expect officials to work in a little and persevere in his crusade. If
